Paradosso del treno 2:

un treno ha sul suo percorso un passaggio a livello (prima A e poi B) distanti tra loro 1Km.

Nel momento in cui il treno raggiunge B partono due raggi di luce che viaggiano in direzione opposta al treno: il raggio Uno parte dalla punta della locomotiva e viaggia dentro il treno e percorre tutte le carrozze fino ad uscire dalla porta posteriore ed arrivare a A e ci mette tempo t_1 .

Il raggio Due invece parte da terra e viaggia all'esterno del treno parallelo a Uno e arriva ad A con tempo t_2 .

I due raggi dovrebbero arrivare al punto A contemporaneamente, no?

Allora abbiamo appurato senza ombra di dubbio che i due raggi arrivano nello stesso istante da A.

Ora, dire che il raggio Due $\tilde{\leftarrow}$ partito da un sistema inerziale ed $\tilde{\leftarrow}$ arrivato ad A equivale a dire che quando parte $\tilde{\leftarrow}$ come se io (che sono B) faccio partire un raggio che viaggia sulla terra (inerziale e solidale con me) e arriva a A, giusto?

Poi il raggio Uno che parte da un sistema inerziale ma in moto rispetto alla terra e quindi rispetto a A equivale a dire che il raggio parte ma la terra ruota leggerissimamente e sposta un poco B $\pi\tilde{\leftarrow}^1$ lontano quindi Uno percorrei 1Km $\pi\tilde{\leftarrow}^1$ in briciolo di strada che equivale al movimento della terra: ma abbiamo appurato che i due raggi arrivano a B nel medesimo istante, come $\tilde{\leftarrow}$ possibile allora che Uno abbia percorso un po' $\pi\tilde{\leftarrow}^1$ di strada?

Oppure si pu $\tilde{\leftarrow}^2$ anche dire cos $\tilde{\leftarrow}$:

infatti si potrebbe anche usare un raggio solo ma l'osservatore sul treno vedrebbe il raggio di luce percorrere un tratto di strada $\pi\tilde{\leftarrow}^1$ lungo del lungo perch $\tilde{\leftarrow}$, sebbene di poco, il treno avr $\tilde{\leftarrow}$ un po' percorso strada e per lui, sul treno, il raggio avr $\tilde{\leftarrow}$ quindi percorso un po' $\pi\tilde{\leftarrow}^1$ di strada...

Spero di essermi fatto capire ho pensato di farci un'aggiunta che forse pu $\tilde{\leftarrow}^2$ chiarire: non $\tilde{\leftarrow}$ detto che s $\tilde{\leftarrow}$ debba per forza lanciare un segnale luminoso ma anche un oggetto fisico, una palla, L'osservatore a terra vede la palla andare dalla punta fino al passaggio a livello B e l'osservatore sul treno vede la palla percorrere tutto il treno e poi andare mlte e arrivare a B, ora per l'osservatore sul treno la palla ha percorso la lunghezza del treno $\pi\tilde{\leftarrow}^1$ la strada dalla fine a B mentre l'osservatore a terra vede la palla percorrere il tratto dalla punta a B che $\tilde{\leftarrow}$ meno della lunghezza che vede invece l'osservatore sul treno, $\tilde{\leftarrow}$ questo che non mi torna?- come mai ci sono due lunghezze differenti per lo stesso saggio di luce?

devi prima scaricare i sorgenti, li scopmpatti, entri dentro al treno A e dai /configure & make & make install

prova a semplificare usando un singolo fotone, cosa succede?

prova con la Slack, 'sti tool automagici a volte incasinano invece di semplificare;

ERRORE BLU!

Il comando giusto Ã¨:

../configure && make && make install

Come? Un momento! Sulla mia nuova connessione superluminale a neutrini mi informano che l'opener ha una versione ultrarelativistica di make che termina prima di battere il tasto return.

ERRORE ROSSO! (arancione dai...)

a casa mia i primi due si danno come $ ed il terzo come #

No perch  il raggio 1 viaggia alla stessa velocit  del raggio 2 ma gli devi togliere la velocit  del treno, quindi ci metter  pi  tempo e la rotazione terrestre non influisce perch    uguale per tutti e due.
