Paradosso del treno 2:

un treno ha sul suo percorso un passaggio a livello (prima A e poi B) distanti tra loro 1Km.

Nel momento in cui il treno raggiunge B partono due raggi di luce che viaggiano in direzione opposta al treno: il raggio Uno parte dalla punta della locomotiva e viaggia dentro il treno e percorre tutte le carrozze fino ad uscire dalla porta posteriore ed arrivare a A e ci mette tempo t1.

Il raggio Due invece parte da terra e viaggia all'esterno del treno parallelo a Uno e arriva ad A con tempo t2.

I due raggi dovrebbero arrivare al punto A contemporaneamente, no?

Allora abbiamo appurato senza ombra di dubbio che i due raggi arrivano nello stesso istante da A.

Ora, dire che il raggio Due " partito da un sistema inerziale ed " arrivato ad A equivale a dire che quando parte " come se io (che sono B) faccio partire un raggio che viaggia sulla terra (inerziale e solidale con me) e arriva a A, giusto?

Poi il raggio Uno che parte da un sistema inerziale ma in moto rispetto alla terra e quindi rispetto a A equivale a dire che il raggio parte ma la terra ruota leggerissimamente e sposta un poco B più lontano quindi Uno percorre 1Km più in briciole di strada che equivale al movimento della terra: ma abbiamo appurato che i due raggi arrivano a B nel medesimo istante, come è possibile allora che Uno abbia percorso un po' più di strada?

Oppure si può anche dire così:

infatti si potrebbe anche usare un raggio solo ma l'osservatore sul treno vedrebbe il raggio di luce percorrere un tratto di strada più lungo del lungo perché, sebbene di poco, il treno avrà un po' percorso strada e per lui, sul treno, il raggio avrà quindi percorso un po' più di strada...

Spero di essermi fatto capire ho pensato di farci un'aggiunta che forse può chiarire: non è detto che sia debba per forza lanciare un segnale luminoso ma anche un oggetto fisico, una palla, L'osservatore a terra vede la palla andare dalla punta fino al passaggio a livello B e l'osservatore sul treno vede la palla percorrere tutto il treno e poi andare oltre e arrivare a B, ora per l'osservatore sul treno la palla ha percorso la lunghezza del treno più la strada dalla fine a B mentre l'osservatore a terra vede la palla percorrere il tratto dalla punta a B che è meno della lunghezza che vede l'osservatore sul treno, è questo che non mi torna?- come mai ci sono due lunghezze differenti per lo stesso saggio di luce?

devi prima scaricare i sorgenti, li scopmpatti, entri dentro al treno A e dai /configure & make & make install

prova con la Slack, 'sti tool automagici a volte incasinano invece di

ERRORE BLU!

Il comando giusto Ã¨:

./configure && make && make install

Come? Un momento! Sulla mia nuova connessione superluminale a neutrini mi informano che l'opener ha una versione ultrarelativistica di make che termina prima di battere il tasto return.

E a ~ mia invece si da un bel

$./configure --prefix=/home/marco

$make

$make install

No perchÃ© il raggio 1 viaggia si alla stessa velocitÃ del raggio 2 ma gli devi togliere la velocitÃ del treno, quindi ci metterÃ piÃ¹ tempo e la rotazione terrestre non influisce perchÃ© Ã© uguale per tutti e due.
